Product liability claims against drug manufacturers are on the rise in Canada. Pharmaceutical companies are increasingly subject to product liability class actions and mass torts. Companies involved in such claims face heightened media and shareholder scrutiny. Our product liability lawyers have extensive experience working with pharmaceutical companies in this challenging legal environment. Our reputation as one of Canada's leading product liability defence firms is built in part upon our experience in defending leading pharmaceutical companies in complex product litigation.

we have the experience and the resources

The effective defence of pharmaceutical product liability claims demands specialized expertise. Such claims typically involve complex issues of medical causation. Defence counsel must also have a sound knowledge of business practices in the pharmaceutical industry and the intense regulatory environment in which pharmaceutical companies operate. Our many years of experience in working with pharmaceutical companies has furnished our lawyers with the necessary specialist expertise.

Our firm is particularly adept when it comes to cross-border co-ordination, an increasingly important skill set when defending complex pharmaceutical litigation, particularly in the area of class actions and mass torts. On a daily basis our lawyers are involved in defending pharmaceutical claims in parallel with ongoing civil and regulatory proceedings in other jurisdictions.

Our product liability team also maintains an extensive network of academics, clinicians and consultants to provide support and expert evidence in pharmaceutical cases.
